

DISCLAIMER:

Unauthorized Recruitment And Fake Employment Offer Letters

SecurityGen brings to your attention that some fraudulent persons are making fake and false job offers on behalf of SecurityGen Ltd. by sending fake employment offer letters via e-mail or making telephone calls unauthorizedly using the name, trademark and logo of SecurityGen Ltd. and posing themselves as employees or representatives of SecurityGen Ltd, often requesting to provide personal information from you such as ID, driver's license, Social Security Number, bank account numbers, credit card information, and/or other personal documents, as well as to transfer money for such employment. Such correspondence should not be treated as an offer from SecurityGen Ltd.

We urge job-seekers not to be misled by such communication and if any person receives such a job offer or an interview call on behalf of SecurityGen Ltd., we strongly advise to avoid any response to such communication and to disregard the activities of these fraudulent individuals at all times.

Any communication by potential job-seekers with such persons whether by e-mail or via telephone calls or otherwise will be at their own risk.

SecurityGen Ltd. shall not in any way whatsoever accept any liability for any loss or damage that may be caused whether directly or indirectly through communication with such fraudulent persons.

Please note that is a company registered in the UK and it does not have any rep offices in the United States and it does not send job offers from any domain other than @secgen.com.

Should you have any doubts, please contact us at contact@secgen.com to verify if the email you were contacted by is legitimate.